

O'Neill's "The Dance Music of Ireland"

This PDF document was assembled from the "abc" music transcriptions of Frank Nordberg at <http://www.musicaviva.net>. His original abc files are available at <http://www2.redhawk.org/irish/oneill/>

The Musica Viva site has sheet music, MIDI's, and ABC for thousands of songs and is well worth a visit. I am not certain if Frank's original files in the O'Neill's book format are available on that site, though. I downloaded the ABC files from the location given above. Where Frank found it necessary to insert a comment regarding the transcription those comments are usually, but not necessarily always, identified by a number above or below the staff and a corresponding footnote number in the "Notes" section below the tune. In any cases where I found it necessary to insert a comment, I used [JSA] to identify the comment as not one of Frank's so as to avoid inadvertently putting words in another's mouth.

Frank Nordberg used BarFly (a Mac ABC program). He made liberal use of BarFly's macro facility so I first wrote PC software to replace the BarFly macros with what I believe to be the original score (converting a fully notated roll with numerous 16th and 32nd notes to a common DDD in a jig, for example). Where Frank's macros implemented a roll I used the actual symbol for a roll (an arc) instead of the general purpose ornament symbol, a tilde (~). Where Frank's macros implemented a trill or mordent I used the general purpose tilde. However, remember that part of the charm of Irish traditional music is ornamentation provided by individual players and one shouldn't necessarily slavishly attempt to copy the performance (real or electronic) of another.

BarFly also writes ABC with non-standard line breaks, resulting in thousands of lines of ABC source that had to be "massaged" by hand to avoid errors in other parsers and to format the printed scores attractively. As part of this process I sometimes reformatted the staves and bars, such as converting a repeat at the end of one line followed by a repeat beginning another line into a double repeat bar in the middle of a line. In such cases I did my best to remain faithful to the meaning of the notation while disregarding the appearance of the printed notation in favor of legibility and space. I.e. I attempted to make the best compromise between conservation of space and readability of printed scores.

I used James AllWright's fine program, abc2midi, to create MIDI files of the tunes. Those MIDI files are available in a companion zip file from the same web site where you obtained this document. Note that, while abc2midi is a fine program, it does not always play repeats, parts, alternate endings, and decorations correctly. Use the score and annotations as the final authority and the MIDI only for learning the melody intervals by ear.

You may wish to use a good MIDI sequencer program to adjust the tempo of the tunes as needed, either for learning or simply because the default tempo is incorrect.

Please note that on the score pages (not the indexes and bookmarks) clicking on a title will play the corresponding MIDI file if your computer is configured with a default MIDI player.

Enjoy!

O'Neill's "The Dance Music of Ireland"

738. The Piper's Son

Rhythm: Reel

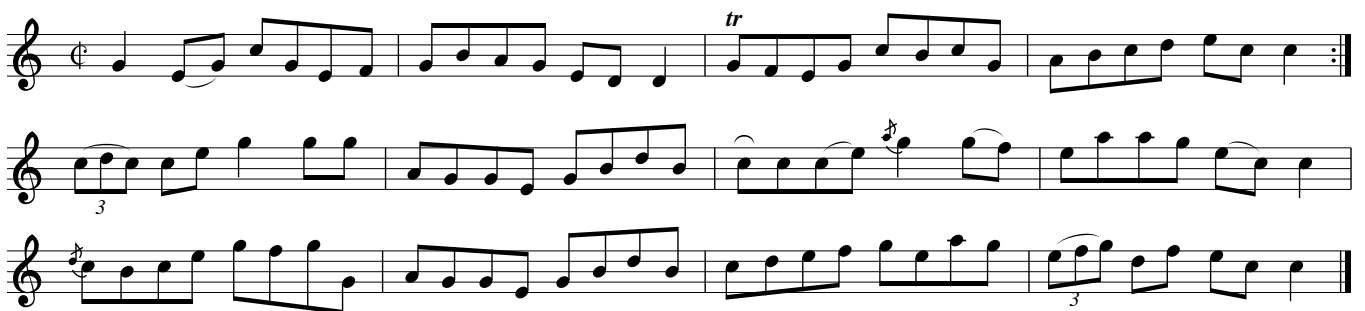

739. Turkeys In The Straw

Rhythm: Reel

Notes: Is that an Irish title? OK, the turkey has been known in Europe since 1523, but I still doubt that there is any traditional Irish song about that bird. It's more likely that the title (though, not necessarily the tune!) is of US origin. It's clear – both from O'Neill and other sources – that Irish immigrants to the USA tended to keep close contact with their native country and that there always was an extensive cultural exchange between Ireland and Irish-American communities.

O'Neill's "The Dance Music of Ireland"

In the original abc files, tunes 751 through 799 were misnumbered and out of sequence. The "book" line appeared to contain the correct tune number so I renumbered the tunes accordingly. Tune 750 was missing completely. [JSA]
